A set of new printed clock lists have been prepared by the selectmen of Paris, and are being used for the primary election. This is the first list that has been printed since the town was organized.

A rough count of the names by measurement of columns shows a total of 1533 votes in "Ward One," with polling place at South Paris, and 625 in "Ward Two," with polling place at West Paris. It will be interesting to see how these figures will compare with the number of votes cast in the primary election.

A familiar figure to South Paris people was laid to rest Saturday—the collier known to every one as "Nita." She was formerly owned by the late John F. Stanley, and made a record for herself when a bull dog attacked him at the Auburn fish hatchery, where he was superintendent, some years ago. The enclosure in which the dog kept him was the hidden territory to Nita, but she dug her way under the fence and attacked the deer in the rear. Although Mr. Stanley died in consequence of the attack of the deer, he was doubtless saved from immediate death by the dog's act. Since Mr. Stanley's death she has been owned by W. Bowker's. Because of her advancing age and infirmities, she was chloroformed and given suitable burial.

In establishing that character, he urged, keep physically and mentally clean. Be truthful. Treat others honestly. Pay your bills. Have the moral courage to do and say what is right. Do not be ashamed to be known as a disciple of Christ. Finally, do unto others as you would that they should do unto you.

The singing was by the choir of the Universalist church, Miss Evelyn Wright, soprano, Mrs. E. A. Perkins, alto, Harry Conant, tenor, C. S. Fuller, bass, assisted by Mrs. Elsie Barnes, with Miss Nellie M. Jackson at the piano.

A Tea Set and Tea with a Difference.
My tea set has always attracted considerable attention. Even the clerk who sold it to me looked surprised when I chose it. I got it at a Japanese store in Boston, and it is of that familiar Japanese lacquerware which is sold very cheaply, in all Oriental shops. But, here is the novelty of it—instead of having it all one color, I chose one cup of each color in which the ware comes. I have a rose-colored, a mauve, a yellow, a Chinese blue, a moss green, and a brown cup, with plates to match. The teapot is rose, the creamer yellow, and the sugar bowl and cake plates are mauve. The shades blend beautifully, and the rainbow effect of the whole is both unusual and attractive.

It is a tea set with possibilities, for to intimate friends one can offer a cup expressive of the guest's personality, strangers are served with cups best suited to their gowns, and children like to choose their own color. In a colorful way, therefore, it helps make afternoon tea "just a little different."

After all, tea can be made a festive rite by simple changes. For instance, instead of serving the conventional cream or lemon, try lemon, cloves and maraschino cherries. Or, use mint tea. It is unusually delicious, and look very attractive when served in a three compartment dish. Fruit juices are pleasing substitutes for lemon slices in tea. Or, juice, or the liquid from preserved pineapple or peaches is delicious in hot tea, when a teaspoonful of a cup is used.

For a change it is interesting to use orange or lemon sugar. To prepare it rub brown sugar on a sponge or lemon until it has absorbed some of the oil, and consequently a pungent flavor of the fruit.

Simple cakes are best with tea, and hot muffins with honey or rolled oats are English favorites. Rolled toast is simple to prepare and looks very pretty. Butter this slice of white bread, sprinkle with cinnamon and sugar or grated cheese. Roll the bread and fasten with a toothpick. Brown quickly in the broiler oven, turning the rolls in order to brown them on all sides. Take out the toothpicks before serving.

Myrtle frosting makes a plain cake interesting. Bake your favorite layer cake batter in a shallow cake pan. Cover very thick with myrtle frosting, made of two cups of confectioners' sugar, and one teaspoonful of butter, melted with one tablespoonful of boiling water. Flavor with vanilla. When this has spread a coating of melted, unsweetened chocolate over it. Out the cake in squares. You will find the double frosting delicious.

Value of a Home-Served Meal.
The university had closed for a few days' vacation between the spring and summer sessions, but M. B., my roommate, and I were staying on for a few days to say farewell to friends on the campus before returning to our homes in the East. One evening as we were in the dining room, open to both faculty and students, we were attracted by a pale, blond young man who seemed all the more forlorn because he had been seated at a table with three members of the faculty, who were so absorbed in their conversation that they did not realize that this boy was sitting with them. M. B., instantly recognized him as M. B., a young Danish student who had been in some language class with her, and asked me if I were willing to have him join us. Of course I gave my consent, and it was a real joy to see his face light up when M. B. asked him to come to our table. This little act of kindness affected him so deeply that at first he could not talk, and as he got control of his emotions, he told us why he felt this so strongly.

Coming to a strange country, with little money, he had broken his health in a brave struggle for an education. But he was not unhappy because he had been forced to work so hard—he expected to do this; it was because he longed for a glimpse of real home life—even a "home meal" among friends would have meant much to him. A few university people in the town had invited him to dinner, but instead of taking him into their own homes and providing a simple meal in homelike surroundings, they had taken him to a hotel or cafeteria. No matter how simple the meal, how much more it would have meant to him if he could have eaten it in a home atmosphere.

As I know of many other similar cases that year, that were only a little less and because the students were from distant sections of our own country, instead of from a foreign country, I hope this story may reach every college and university town, and that the readers will see that every student, who cannot get home occasionally, is entertained at least once during the college year at a "home" dinner. Surely we are not going to let ourselves deserve the reputation which is so rapidly gaining ground, of being a country without home life. We all enjoy a change, and if you family usually dine at home, take them out to a hotel or restaurant occasionally—but if you are entertaining friends who do not ordinarily eat at home—especially if they are college students—take them into your own home and serve them a simple, home-cooked meal. You will find that you have added much to the happiness of your guest.

Ways to Use Cold Pancakes.
"Use them," writes our correspondent, "in two ways. First, after they are quite cold I cut them in very thin strips, like noodles, with a very sharp knife, put them in the soup tureen, and pour over them a well-seasoned beef broth. This makes, when served at once, a very good soup. My second way is to make them into a dessert. The cold cakes are spread with a mixture of sugar, ground cinnamon, and raisins, each pancake is rolled with the mixture inside, and they are placed in a baking dish in a row, and quite close to one another, milk is poured over almost to cover them, and then they are put in the oven and baked. This makes a very good pudding, not unlike a bread pudding."

How to Use Cold Bacon and Eggs.
Very delicious croquettes or meatballs may be made by putting the left-over bacon and eggs through the food chopper, chopping them so fine that their identity will be lost. Then mix with an equal volume of mashed potatoes, white or sweet, and if you have any corn, corn and ends, such as bits of celery, carrots, etc., these too may be chopped and added, but the bacon, potatoes, and eggs are all you will need. Mix with a little of the bacon gravy, form into croquettes, roll in crumbs, dip in beaten egg, roll again in crumbs, and fry in deep fat. Or make small balls and saute these on a hot, greased pan. Or flatten into cakes and brown on a hot pan. Serve with plenty of oress, and you will have a good breakfast or luncheon dish.

Pineapple Layer Cake.
Cream one-third a cup of butter, add gradually one cup of sugar, two eggs, beaten until light, one-half a cup of milk with one-half a teaspoonful of soda, and one cup and five-eighths of pastry flour, sifted with one teaspoonful of cream of tartar, and one-eighth a teaspoonful of salt. Flavor with one teaspoonful of vanilla. Bake in two round, shallow pans, and when cold put pineapple filling between and on top of the cake. One-half of the rule for filling may be used, putting it between the two layers and sprinkling confectioners' sugar over the top.

PINEAPPLE FILLING.
Mix six tablespoonfuls of flour, two-thirds a cup of sugar, and a pinch of salt. Add two egg-yolks, slightly beaten, then one-half a cup of pineapple juice and one cup and one-half of milk. Cook twenty minutes in a double boiler, stirring constantly at first, then occasionally. Cool and add canned pineapple, which has been cut in small dice, using one cup and one-half.

Stewed celery eaten with the liquid in which it is cooked is excellent in cases of rheumatism and neuralgia.
